

ISRAEL'S BIG DAY

We've missed the dancing. We've missed the chaos. We've missed the energy that only an Israeli wedding can deliver. Still, that's no reason to miss out on one of Israel's most iconic exports: the wedding dress. From the ethereal magic of Mira Zwillinger's hand-embellished gowns to the red-carpet elegance of Galia Lahav, Israeli bridal design remains a world leader because it doesn't follow trends – it sets them, and Helena Kolan is one of the new rising stars crafting fairytale gowns by appointment. "I do... want a dress by Alon Livne," bleat the brides, but Alon also excels at casual and has collaborated with Israeli label Castro, which has brought back Bar Refaeli, 25 years after her first campaign, to be pictured with him.

Manta Pulse Hair Brush (£70)

Extreme weight loss is terrible for hair, which can be sorted by the Manta Pulse, a miracle brush that vibrates gently to stimulate blood flow and protect breakage. It's ideal for anyone who has noticed more strands in the shower post-Ozempic and it adapts to the shape of your hand and scalp, detangles gently, and gives your follicles the equivalent of a pep talk.

Scentology Body Mist (£7.99)

Summer is the season for switching things up, including your scent. Your go-to fragrance (Le Labo Santal, perhaps?) is iconic, but can feel heavy come July. Superdrug's Scentology Body Mist (£7.99) is an affordable way to smell like sunshine and cocktails. The six-scent collection includes vanilla and nectarine blossom (a dessert island in a bottle) and tuberose and spiced pear (white florals, ripe pear and soft spice) are a refreshing change for warm nights, and you won't think twice about spraying it all over.

FLOWER GIRLS

Austrian mother and daughter Daniela and Esther Stern turned their love of nature into a jewellery brand. Herbalist Daniela dries the plants and photographer Esther encases them in hand-blown glass and silver pendants or turns them into earrings. Wearable keepsakes in summer to treasure in winter.
